What Is Cyberbullying?

Cyberbullying is a type of harassment that is cause in online way. This mainly happens through social media platforms where the user is bullied, shamed, even intimidated and angered. This is much different than the physical type of bullying which can even continue for 24/7 in an online way.

How it typically happens?

The people who mainly perform such kind of online bullying are called as cyberbullies or cyberbullying predators too. Cyberbullying predators are individuals who use digital devices and online platforms to repeatedly harass, threaten, or humiliate victims, often hiding behind anonymity. They may be peers, acquaintances, or strangers who target victims via social media, gaming, or texting, causing severe psychological harm, depression, and anxiety.

This is mainly done through social media platform where these predators target a person and then post their sexual photos, or threaten to post fake photos, start rumours and spread private info on internet and thus control them like their own puppets. Thus the victim might face online defamation and thus even spoil his/her career and even spoil their life.

This is mainly done in many ways like making the victim click on links, making them post their private photos or sometimes even create their fake photos and then message the victim and threaten them to leak the image making it viral. Since the internet is a place where information and rumours spread rapidly, the victim gets scared and follows the predator as he says. Even this might happen to students where seniors bully and abuse the junior students online and thus ruining their life by online ragging.

Who is Usually Targeted?

College students are frequent targets, particularly those who are active in online communities or those perceived as "different". In an academic setting, this often manifests as harassment in batch WhatsApp groups or anonymous confession pages.

Consequences of this cyberbullying.

The impact is very severe and the victims are often found to face depression and some cases of suicide have also been found due to continuous anxiety. Even in academics, student might get drop in grades and create himself to be enclosed in their own bubble not interacting with anyone because they get scared to interact with anyone else.

One of my friends faced this cyberbullying where a senior was bullying him and even abusing him badly. This is a passive kind of stress which slowly causes anxiety and he started talking less and even started skipping classes to avoid meeting the bully in school.
